

Visitors impressed with new addition

The Glenmore Park Church Seniors were the first group to witness the new addition to our collection, a remarkable 1700s replica. Their visit to the museum left them amazed not only with the newly added item but with the museum's entirety. They praised the museum's unique approach to showcasing history as a "living, working museum," which kept them engaged for two hours. The group was so impressed that they even suggested charging more for the quality of the experience they received. The feedback from the seniors is a testament to the museum's efforts in providing an exceptional and immersive experience to visitors.

The Common press was generously donated by Richard Jermyn from Eden NSW, who also provided a book press and a 1902 Linotype powered by gas. Visitors to the museum can experience the sights, sounds, and smells of a functioning museum by scheduling a group tour during the week or dropping by on Sundays. The museum also offers courses for those interested. The printed word has had a profound impact on the world, and the museum is proud to showcase the history of printing technology.
